Chapter 6: Apostles of God (Divine Triad’s Creation)

After the creation of their three armies, the Divine Triad—Sung Jinwoo, Sung Su-Ho, and Ashborn—understood that while their forces were powerful, there was still a need for a new type of entity, one beyond the mortal limits of dragons, shadows, and celestial soldiers. They required something that could stand as the ultimate force in the multiverse—an entity that was beyond what had existed before.

Thus, they decided to craft the Apostles of God, beings of unparalleled power, forged from the very essence of primordial light. These beings were born of pure divine energy, and they were not only the most powerful of the Triad’s creations but also had an essence that could surpass any being they had encountered. Each Apostle would become an instrument of divine will—warriors of unimaginable strength who would lead their forces with perfection.

The Birth of the Apostles of God

The Apostles of God were forged from the primordial lights that had existed before time itself. These lights, ancient and unfathomable, contained the combined power of creation, destruction, and balance. From this light, the Triad crafted beings of incredible power, beings who would be their agents in the mortal realms.

Each Apostle was angelic in form, standing tall with an imposing and radiant presence. They were clad in silver armor that gleamed with the light of a thousand stars, and their golden helmets shone with the brilliance of the sun itself. Their six wings spread wide, each wing a feather of pure divine energy, marking them as celestial entities that existed beyond time and space. The white robes they wore were as radiant as the stars, glowing with a divine aura that spoke of their heavenly nature.

In each Apostle’s hands was a lance, an artifact that could pierce through the very fabric of reality, channeling the destructive and creative powers that flowed through them. The lance represented not only their authority but their capacity for both protection and annihilation.

These beings, created from light itself, were without shadow—pure, untouchable by darkness. They were beings of divine will, each one more powerful than the Shadow Lords, Fiery Dragon Lords, or Heavenly Soldiers. The Triad had given them a status beyond even that of their other creations.

The Blessings of the Triad

The Divine Triad did not simply create the Apostles of God and leave them to their own devices. No, they imbued these creations with additional power and essence to ensure they could fulfill their roles as the ultimate agents of the Triad’s will.

1. Souls Essence: While the Apostles of God were born from light and had no shadows, they could be killed just like any other being. However, Sung Jinwoo, the Absolute Humanoid Being, added a unique essence to their creation—souls essence. This essence allowed the Apostles to revive upon death. If one of them were to fall, they could return again, stronger than before. They were now bound by an eternal cycle, a never-ending existence where death was not the final end but merely a temporary passage.

2. Destruction Essence: Sung Su-Ho, the Absolute Dragonic Being, added his own essence to the Apostles—destruction essence. This granted the Apostles a level of devastating power unlike any other. Their lances could tear through reality itself, and their mere presence could shatter entire realms. With this infusion of destruction, the Apostles were capable of bringing cataclysmic ruin to those who defied the will of the Divine Triad.

3. Creation Essence: Ashborn, the Absolute Celestial Being, imparted his essence of creation to the Apostles. This allowed them not only to create armies of their own but also to shape and manipulate the very fabric of reality. They could now forge their own heavenly soldiers from light and create realms and pocket dimensions. The Apostles of God were no longer mere warriors—they were creators in their own right, capable of bringing new life into existence and shaping the multiverse as they saw fit.

The Creation of the Army

With their newfound powers, the Apostles of God were now more than just soldiers. They became generals, creators, and guardians of the Divine Triad’s will. The Triad forged hundreds of thousands of these Apostles, each one a masterpiece of divine power. They were the Triad’s ultimate weapon—an army that could not only annihilate but also build and protect.

The Apostles of God did not follow the same natural laws as their previous armies. While the Shadow Lords and Fiery Dragon Lords could grow and reproduce, the Apostles were born from light and could not create new copies of themselves from their own essence. Instead, they relied on their creation essence to forge heavenly soldiers—beings created from divine energy, much like the heavenly soldiers of Ashborn’s army. These soldiers served as extensions of the Apostles, filling their ranks and forming an army of heavenly light.

As the Apostles of God created their armies and shaped the world around them, they remained bound to the will of the Triad. They were not only warriors; they were emissaries of divine judgment, tasked with carrying out the will of the Divine Triad and maintaining balance in the multiverse.

Apostles of God in Battle

The Apostles of God were a force of pure power, unmatched by any being in the multiverse. Their lances could rend the very fabric of existence, and their wings allowed them to traverse the realms with grace and speed. When they marched to war, entire civilizations could crumble beneath their light.

Yet, these warriors were not driven by vengeance or hatred; they were not simply tools of destruction. The Apostles were agents of balance, ensuring that creation and destruction occurred in harmony. They were the force that held the multiverse in check, ensuring that the will of the Divine Triad was upheld.

Under the guidance of the Triad, the Apostles of God became both protectors and avengers, ensuring that no force of chaos or darkness could ever rise to challenge the multiverse again. They were beings of both light and power, holding the balance between creation and destruction.
